THE FRIENDS OF LONG AGO.

When I sit in the twilight gleaming, And the busy streets grow still, I dream of the wide green meadows, And the old house on the hill. I can see the roses blooming About the doorway low, And again my heart gives greeting To the friends of long ago; Dear long ago!

I can see my mother, sitting With life's snow-flakes in her hair, And she smiles above hes knitting, And her face is saintly fair. And I see my father reading From the Bible on his knee; And again I hear him praying As he used to pray for me-So long ago!

Of the boys and girle at home, As I saw them in the dear old days, Before we had learned to roam. And I sing the old songs over, With the friends I used to know, And my heart forgets its sorrows In its dreams of long ago, Dear long ago.

I see all the dear old faces

How widely our feet have wandered, From the old home's tender ties, Some are beyond the ocean, And some are beyond the skies. My heart grows and with thinking Of the triends I used to know; Perhaps I shall meet in heaven All the loved of long ago-Dear long ag .!

Snow Banners of the Californian Alps

The crown of the Sierra, decorated with streaming snow banners, was the most sublime storm phenomenou I ever witnessed in the Alps, far surpassing in plain, downright grandeur all the most imposing effects of clouds, floods, and avalanches. The snow out of which these banners are formed is heaped most beautifully upon the Alps, winter after winter, some times to a depth of twenty or thirty feet; but it does not come from the sky in the form of big feathery flakes, such as one sees in calmer weather and more temperate regions, seldom even in the form of complete crystals. For many of these starry blossoms fall before they are ripe while most of those that do attain perfect development as six-petaled flowers glint againt one another in their fall, and are broken into irregular fragments.

This dry, mealy, fragmentary snow i still farther prepared for the formation of banners by the action of the wind. for instead of at once finding rest, like that which falls into the tranquil depths of the forest zones, it is rolled over and and over, beaten against bare, jagged rocks, and twirled in pits and hollows. like sand in the pot-holes of a river, until finally the keen crytal angles of the fragments are worn off, and the whole is reduced to dust. Wherever strong storm winds find this light, well-ground snow dust in a loose condition, upon exposed slopes where there is a free upward sweep, it is tossed back into the sky, and borne onward from peak to peak in the form of banners or cloud-shaped drifts, according to the The following decision has been ren- velocity of the winds and conformation
